The privilege tax is a curious institution. When a man enters on business, about the first thing he has to do is to file a good bond with the Tax Collector on Privileges that he will make a true and faithful statement, etc., within a year, and pay his tax accordingly. Harvey Mathes has now a hundred or two such bonds in his office that have been forfeited; and yesterday Attorney General Wright told him to get them ready for suing purposes. The Attorney General is going to sue on every one of them.
